Tina Palmero

New York State Department of Public Service

Tina Palmero has over 30 years of regulatory experience working on environmental and clean energy policy issues.

Tina has been with the DPS since 1988 and began her career as a Transmission Facilities Analyst responsible for the review of environmental impacts associated with the siting and construction of electric and gas transmission facilities and electric power plants. She subsequently became active in the initial development of New York's Renewable Portfolio Standard Program in 2003 and now leads the Office of Clean Energy at the DPS to help implement many programs and activities created as part of New York's Reforming the Energy Vision. The Office of Clean Energy is responsible for overseeing activities related to the Clean Energy Standard, the Clean Energy Fund, the New York Green Bank, New York Sun and Community Choice Aggregation.
