Jim Rice

James Edward "Jim" Rice, born March 8, 1953, is a former Major League Baseball left fielder. He played his entire career for the Boston Red Sox. An eight-time American League (AL) All-Star, he was named AL's Most Valuable Player in 1978. He became the ninth player to lead the major leagues in total bases in consecutive seasons, and join Ty Cobb as one of two players to lead the AL in total bases three years in a row.

Rice continued the tradition of his predecessors Ted Williams and Carl Yastrzemski as a power-hitting left fielder who played his entire career for the Red Sox. He ended his career with a .502 slugging average, and then ranked tenth in AL history with 382 home runs.

Rice was an accomplished left fielder, finishing his career with a fielding percentage of .980 and had 137 outfield assists (comparable to Ted Williams' figures of .974 and 140). Aside from playing 1543 games as an outfielder during his career, Rice also appeared as a designated hitter in 530 games.

Rice led the AL in home runs three times, in RBIs twice, in slugging average twice and in total bases four times. He also picked up Silver Slugger awards in 1983 and 1984.

He was an American League All-Star eight times. In addition to winning the American League MVP award in 1978, he finished in the top five in MVP voting five other times.

Jim Rice was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame on July 26, 2009, as the 103rd member voted into the Hall. Rice's number 14 was retired by the Red Sox in a pre-game ceremony on July 28, 2009.

While still a ball player, Rice was named an honorary chairman of The Jimmy Fund, the fundraising arm of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, in 1979, and in 1992 was awarded that organization's "Jimmy Award", which honors individuals who have demonstrated their dedication to cancer research.

After retiring as a player, Rice served as a roving batting coach, a hitting instructor and instructional batting coach with the Red Sox organization.

Since 2003, Jim has been employed as a commentator for the New England Sports Network (NESN), where he contributes to the Red Sox pre-game and post-game shows.
